

Martha Inglis

Martha Inglis is a 37 year old mother of 4, three handsome boys with varying degrees of special needs and a beautiful daughter. Martha was born and raised in Guelph Ontario until she was 10 years old, and then her family moved to Durham Ontario.

Martha moved back to Guelph when she was 17 and completed her high school diploma at Guelph Collegiate Vocational Institute while living a Wyndham House.

Since her early high school years, Martha has been a strong advocate in our community. She marched with thousands of other students to protest against hikes in tuition at universities, and has routinely advocated for greater LGBT rights in Canada. While raising her four children as a single mother, Martha continues to volunteer with local not-for-profit agencies in Guelph such as: the Salvation Army, HOPE House and the Guelph Humane Society. Martha is taking a Community Advocacy course through Conestoga College, and works hard to help improve the life of bullied children so that no one has to endure or experience what she has.

Martha is also passionate about helping family's cope with special needs children, and would like to advocate for seniors rights in the near future.

As a single mother, Martha devotes a lot of time to her children, but dreams about going back to school to become a Personal Support Worker.
